

Transcultural Network for European Literatures and Cultures in the World

Transculturality is a core issue in an open minded, globalized world. The Transcultural Network for European Literatures and Cultures in the World is an emerging transnational network and innovative model of collaboration based at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Groningen. Taking its moves from here, the Transcultural Network cooperates with specialized academic partners throughout Europe in order to build up an informal, creative and critical research cluster.

Within the framework of this network a series of encounters and exchange projects may be planned, ranging from workshops and specific publications to joined masterclasses, lecture activities and the promotion of young researchers.

Contributions entailing literary and cultural studies, film studies and sociology (especially migration and diaspora studies) are welcome. They all must relate to the transcultural paradigm of the construction of cultural entities and of geographical, i.e. regional, national, and continental boundaries.
